

FIG. 18.—Entrance to the Convolvulus Cave, Walsingham, Bermudas. (From a photograph.)

in the rock, often almost masked by vegetation. One, which we passed on our way, called the Convolvulus Cave, is covered with a glorious mantle of Ipomoea nil, its ephemeral flowers changing during the day from brilliant azure to rich purple.