

PLATE LXXV.

Farrea clavigera, F. E. S.,

PAGE

287

- Fig. 1. A damaged specimen, preserved in alcohol; natural size.
- Fig. 2. Transverse section of the tube-wall (combination figure); $\times 80$.
- Fig. 3. Dermal clavula with rounded head, showing two parallel circles of small spines and a little knob on the top; $\times 450$.
- Fig. 4. Gastral clavula with four long teeth; $\times 450$.
- Fig. 5. Club-shaped dermal clavula with a little knob on the top; $\times 450$.
- Fig. 6. Foreign extrinsic intruded spicule, not belonging to this species.
- Fig. 7. Oxyhexaster with long principal, and small terminal rays; $\times 450$.
- Fig. 8. Dermal oxypentact with knotty rays and a small distal tubercle, representing the lost sixth ray; $\times 100$.