For the original definition of the genus, see Note on Risso, 1822 (p. 117), and for a fuller definition, see Note on Risso, 1826 (p. 128). For the brief account of Pisitoe, see Note on Rafinesque-Schmaltz, 1814 (p. 87), and for the confused account of Dactylocera, see Note on Latreille, 1829 (p. 137). Risso includes in his definition of the genus "mandibules palpigères," but after an interval of sixty-six years the statement is still in need of confirmation. Milne-Edwards denies it, saying, Hist. Nat. des Crust., t. iii.

<sup>1</sup> Milne-Edwards, Costa, and Boeck consider that Pisitoe bispinosa, Rafinesque-Schmaltz, 1814, is probably a synonym of Risso's later Phrosina semilunata, but they have not felt justified by Rafinesque's brief description in accepting his names for the genus and species.

<sup>5</sup> As the plate containing Dactylocera nicæensis is referred to in the Hist. Nat. des Crust., t. iii. p. 91, the date is perhaps earlier than 1840.
